Silence Proves Golden in Films Recently Made

HOLLYWOOD.—After 20 years of the talkies, Hollywood again has discovered silence is golden. This is the year of the great quiet.

Players are scrambling for roles wherein they don't say anything. Now we're right back where we started, to the silents, where a movie moved and not stood still to the tune of 40 pages of dialogue.

Movie fans are happy over seeing players who don't yakkity-yak their heads off, too. Every dumb role has won its player back-pats.

A decade or so ago billboards shouted, "Garbo talks." This year's notable event is, "Wyman shuts up." Jane plays a deaf mute in "Johnny Belinda."

Silent Patient Takes Over.

Olivia De Havilland was noisy in "The Snake Pit," but in a couple of scenes another mental patient, Betsy Blair, took over. Miss Blair no spika nothing, having forgotten how, until she gasps, "good-by, Virginia" at the end.

Strong men wept at Ivan Jandl's silence in "The Search." The Czech boy played a war orphan shocked into dumbness. After a couple of reels around Montgomery Clift, the boy chattered away, though. Another player who got off easy with no speeches to memorize was Ann Blyth. She flopped around in a fish tail in "Mr. Peabody and the Mermaid." Talk being the first silent lady he'd met, William Powell promptly fell in love with her.

Una O'Connor spoke only in grunts in "Cluny Brown." Henry Morgan was the silent villain in "The Big Clock." And Dorothy McGuire started the cycle by keeping her tongue tied in "The Spiral Staircase" until she yips the life-saving telephone number in the last reel.

Tarzan, Harpo Marx, and Frankenstein have been doing all right without benefit of dialogue for years, too.

Now that talking's been done away with, Fox studio is eliminating seeing in "Three Wives." Celeste Holm, a central character, prattled all the way through but wasn't seen once.

Danish Professor Thinks Vikings Vanned Columbus

NEW YORK.—Norsemen probably established settlements in America at least one to two hundred years before the arrival of Christopher Columbus in the new world, in the opinion of Prof. Johannes Brosnsted, director of the National Museum at Copenhagen, Denmark, and one of the world's foremost scholars in Viking and medieval archeology.

Dr. Broensted has completed a three-month study tour and examination of important historical and archeological finds—the first such examination of all available evidence by a recognized expert—under auspices of the American-Scandinavian foundation.

His study tour, the professor said, included an examination of the relics, visits to the sites of discovery, and conversations with leading scientists and archeological authorities in this country and Canada, as well as an examination of available pertinent recorded data here and on the continent.

Dr. Broensted explained there are three principal American archeological evidences relative to Norse colonization before the arrival of Columbus. He said these are the Viking Find from Lake Nipigon, near Port Arthur in Canada, the Newport Tower in Touro Park, Newport, R. I., and the Kensington Stone, which was found in Minnesota in 1898, and which now is on exhibition in the Smithsonian Institution.

The Canadian find, consisting of a sword, an axe, and a supposed shield handle, all of iron, he said, "is without doubt a genuine one."

"The axe and the sword are certainly real Viking weapons of Norwegian (or Danish) origin," Professor Broensted continued, "dating from about the year 1000." He added that all the other evidence was equally reliable.

Girl Player Lands Spot On Boys' Hockey Team

COLORADO SPRINGS. — When fans see a blue-eyed strawberry blonde scoring goals or bashing the opposition to the ice with vicious body checks on the Broadmoor Ice Palace rink this winter, they won't be "seeing things." The sight will be real, for it will be a blue-eyed strawberry blonde named Andra McLaughlin.

Andra has given local hockey a new twist this year by being the first member of the fair sex to play on an organized boys' team in the Colorado Springs junior hockey league.

Ever since practice started for the Cheyenne Mountain School ice sextet late in October, the 15-year-old sophomore has not missed a workout. She's been banged and shoved and bruised and bumped, but she was ready to take over at right wing for the Indians. Andra is one of the nation's top hands in fancy skating, so the roughest, toughest, fastest sport of them all comes naturally to her.

Appomattox is a growing town!

IN MEMORIAM:

In loving memory of my daddy, William T. Davidson, who passed away one year ago, Jan. 11, 1948.
We all knew you were slipping away,
When our Heavenly Father came that day;
We were standing by with folded hands,
When with Him you went into a sweeter land.

In my heart your memory lingers,
Always tender, fond and true.
There's not a day, dear daddy,
I do not think of you.

Rest in peace, dear daddy,
It's sweet to breathe your name;
In life I loved you dearly,
In death I do the same.

Criminal, 94, Gives Up Primrose Path for Being Treated Kindly

LEEDS, ENGLAND — England's "Grand Old Man of Crime," Bob Woolridge of Leeds, 94 years old, has after 15 years of "going straight," given up the primrose path of dalliance, following an experience in court that so stunned him he was scarcely able to talk. This experience consisted in being "let off."

Bob's long record, beginning when he was seven years old, had led him to suppose that for his latest offense he would get at least three or four months in prison on charges of attempted burglary and possessing housebreaker's tools.

The "old-timer" has been repairing shoes for a meager living. Recently a pair he was mending was stolen, and he was worried about what he might have to pay the customer. So he went to an iron foundry and tried to break open a door with a jimmy. He was caught hiding behind bushes near the works.

When he was brought before the Recorder, that official said:

"There is only one thing that has never happened to you, and it is going to happen today. You have never been let off. You can go home."

The aged culprit stumbled out of the dock. Outside, he joined his old friend, Ernest Western, who had told the court that at heart Bob was a "nice and decent old gentleman." Mr. Western had promised that he and his wife would look after Bob in the future, and see to it that he kept out of trouble.

On reaching the two-room cottage that is his home, old Bob remembered that he had failed to thank the recorder. So he sat right down and wrote that official a letter of thanks. He did a neat job, without spectacles, pausing once in the writing of the letter to remark that none of all the "beaks" who had sentenced him altogether to 45 years in jail had been so merciful.
